2018 FAITH & JUSTICE RESEARCH GRANT OVERVIEW

Loyola Marymount University's Mission Statement commits the University to the service of faith and the promotion of justice. At LMU, when we link faith and justice, we refer primarily to a biblically inspired concern for the marginalized, for those whom the Hebrew Scriptures refer to as "the widow, the orphan, and the stranger in the land" and their contemporary counterparts on the margins of our society.

In 1975, meeting in solemn assembly, the Jesuits from around the world determined that the hallmark of any ministry deserving the name Jesuit would be its "service of faith" of which the "promotion of justice" is an absolute requirement. Jesuit education is noteworthy for the way it provides to students, faculty, staff, and administrators an opportunity to move, in freedom, toward a mature and intellectually adult faith. This includes enabling them to develop a disciplined sensitivity towards the suffering of our world and a will to act for the elimination of unjust social structures that cause suffering.

Most of the world's religions share similar concerns and take action for justice as central to their faith. Moreover, there are also crucial secular visions for justice. Scholars in every discipline are confronted with issues that involve questions of justice.

This grant was created to embody a commitment to justice in LMU's academic ethos. In 2001, an annual grant competition was established with the goal of encouraging faculty to integrate issues of faith and justice – or an understanding of justice consistent with the LMU Mission – into their research. The purpose of this grant opportunity is to enable faculty to think more profoundly about the issues at the heart of our Mission.

Awarded to LMU tenured and tenure-track faculty, the Faith and Justice Research grant proposals must SPECIFICALLY address:

- 1) research questions related to the service of faith and the promotion of justice as defined in LMU's mission statement, or
- 2) research questions that focus only on issues of social justice.

Applicants must clearly state how the proposed research project supports these goals. Those applications that fail to address them explicitly will not be considered by the reviewing Committee.

Tangential connections to faith and justice are not sufficient for consideration. Only research projects with a primary focus on one of the two above goals will be considered. Applicants are encouraged to contact the Committee before submission, if there are any questions about the suitability of a potential project.
