History and Tradition of Loyola Marymount University (LMU)

The history of Loyola Marymount University extends back to 1548 when the founder of the Society of Jesus, Saint Ignatius Loyola, endorsed the first school. Independent of this, the Religious of the Sacred Heart of Mary was establishing educational institutions in France in 1849. The educational establishment of LMU begins with the inauguration of St. Vincent's College for boys in Los Angeles. Though the school closed in 1911, members of the Society of Jesus founded Los Angeles College. The College was eventually relocated to the Westchester campus in 1929 and received university recognition in 1930. Around this time, the Religious of Sacred Heart of Mary began educating young women at Marymount Junior College, which transitioned to a four-year institution and started awarding baccalaureate degrees in 1949. By 1968, Marymount College had moved to the Westchester campus of Loyola University and marked the formal partnership between the Congregation of Saint Joseph of Orange and the Religious of Sacred Heart of Mary. It was not until 1973 that Loyola University and Marymount College joined together to form Loyola Marymount University.

Today LMU is a private Catholic University located in the heart of Los Angeles, CA a dynamic city that inspires creative work, advances research, and embraces active social justice engagement. LMU is at the forefront when it comes to the global capital arts and entertainment, innovation and technology, and business and entrepreneurship. LMU offers rigorous undergraduate, graduate, and doctoral and professional programs. It serves 10,256 students (7,336 undergraduates, 1,802 graduates, and 1,121 law students) from diverse backgrounds and religious perspectives (LMU IRDS, February 2024). The University supports a student population that is academically ambitious and committed to living a life of meaning and purpose.

LMU is the largest Catholic university on the West Coast and comprised of seven schools and colleges:

minority students: 27.29 percent Hispanic / Latino, 8 percent African American, 7.47 percent two or more races, 9.85 percent Asian American, and less than one percent Native Hawaiian and American Indian / Alaska Native students; with White student enrollment at 36.93 percent of the undergraduate students. (LMU IRDS, February 2024). Underrepresented graduate students comprise the majority of the enrollment at 61.3 percent (combined American Indian/Alaska Native, Asian, Black, Hispanic, Native Hawaiian, and Two or more races) compared to 26.4 percent White (IBID). The same trend is seen for all degree seeking students at the graduate and undergraduate level, where underrepresented students represent nearly 43 percent of the enrollment compared to 39 percent of the White students.

For fall 2023, The Hispanic Association of Colleges and Universities (HACU) designates LMU as a Hispanic Serving Institution (HSI) (<https://www.hacu.net/hacu/HSIs.asp>), which is a milestone for LMU. Previously, LMU was designated as an Emerging Hispanic Serving Institution. Although LMU meets HACU's definition of HSI with 26.8 percent combined graduate and undergraduate Hispanic student enrollment, the federal eligibility for HSI uses a narrower definition of full time equivalent (FTE) degree seeking undergraduate students for this distinction, which places LMU at 24.5 percent Hispanic undergraduate student enrollment (LMU IRDS, February 2024).

Mission

The mission of LMU is the encouragement of learning, the education of the whole person, and the service of faith and the promotion of justice. The University is institutionally committed to Roman Catholicism and takes its fundamental inspiration from the combined heritage of the Jesuits, the Marymount Sisters, and the Sisters of St. Joseph of Orange. This Catholic identity and religious heritage distinguish LMU from other universities and provides touchstones for understanding LMU's threefold mission, which is as follows:

- The encouragement of learning
- The education of the whole person
- The service of faith and the promotions of justice

As a mission driven institution, Loyola Marymount University serves all students with a social justice framework, an emphasis on the whole person, and a commitment to diversity and global awareness. Outreach and service to the campus community reflects LMU's Jesuit and Marymount Catholic heritage, a dedication that maintains a diverse community, embraces interfaith exchange, and fosters mutual respect.
